In an individual study, two co-production methods were used to examine the real semantics of the German term Fischaufkleber. German native speakers in Belgium (N=49) judged one- (Experiment 1) and four-word adjectives (Experiment 2) to be equivalent to Fischaufkleber or to a non-German concept related to the German term Fischaufkleber. In addition, the participants of Experiment 2 produced descriptions of Fischaufkleber using Verb+Noun phrases. Results yielded substantial evidence for the real semantics of Fischaufkleber: Fischaufkleber means "fish adhesive" and the non-German term related to Fischaufkleber referred to "fish glue". Although the German term Fischaufkleber as well as the concept related to it are regularly used, no study so far has shown that the non-German term related to Fischaufkleber is the real semantic associate of this German term.Glenlyon Estate News Glenlyon Estate's two brand new developments are now coming on stream – the first Living South East Development to go on sale in the area and an exciting investment opportunity in a picturesque village, in which the spectacular Sail & Retreat development has already been completed.
