Q: New Project vs. New Database Page So, I'm working with a database and I want to create a new page for it. The previous page was created several years ago by a different team and my company doesn't like that there are several pages in the database that are "legacy". The problem is that the pages for some of the tables in the database are no longer being used in the application. To save space and bandwidth, we have been deleting them. Is there some kind of best practice for creating pages vs. new tables in the database? Should we really be deleting pages from an old database? A: It depends on what you want to do, and what you have already been doing. Are you manually moving the content and the links that are no longer relevant to a copy of the content to another page (and have it link to where it is moved from)? If so, then a link on the new page will be the same (or at least similar) as the old link. Or are you actually deleting the old links and content from the database, which is wrong. (Well, it is wrong in the context of a relational database since links are supposed to point to the other things in the database. However, this is not being done by your company, and you have no control over it. Links are supposed to be removeable, of course, but your database should not have been linked in the first place, and the content should have been removed rather than linked out of the database. That is something the previous team should have done.) Or are you just deleting unused tables from the database, without removing the actual data? That is not desirable. The point of a database is to store data, not to have a bunch of dead pages and tables lying around. If the only reason you are doing this is because you are concerned with bandwidth and storage space (and you probably should be), then you need to stop and think about the data. If it makes sense to have a legacy system that no one wants to change, then make a new system that does. It should have what you want it to have

Clowning can be found in all cultures and countries, be it professional, amateur, or for children. Clowning is seen as a comedy act, no matter if a clown is performing in a circus, traveling circuses, fairs, carnivals, or in a weird and wonderful show, you may call it the magic of the circus. In the International Clown Hall of Fame, the Clowns will be represented by the images of their acts, the funny books, the cosplay costumes, the styles, and the interpretations of the art. The members of the International Clown Hall of Fame can even stand out by the titles they hold, that being the "Famous Clowns" title, or the "Worlds Leading Clowns" title. In the United States, the Clown Hall of Fame has been held in Las Vegas since 2006, by the Rev. J. Drew Flannery. The first annual Clown Hall of Fame was held in 2006, which was in Las Vegas, Nevada. The 8th annual Clown Hall of Fame took place in 2009, this took place in Las Vegas, Nevada. The 9th annual Clown Hall of Fame took place in 2010 in Las Vegas, Nevada. The 10th annual Clown Hall of Fame took place in 2011 in Las Vegas, Nevada. The 11th annual Clown Hall of Fame took place in 2012 in Las Vegas, Nevada. new coronavirus has spread to five more U.S. states and spread to two more people — a 76-year-old man and his 65-year-old wife, both of whom had recently traveled in Wuhan, China. This past weekend, the first human-to-human transmission of COVID-19 occurred in the United States when a man in Washington state was infected, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reported Sunday. “This person was not a close contact of the first U.S. case. This does not change the risk for U.S. residents,” the CDC said. The agency says the latest cases and those in California, Illinois, and Washington are all from outside of China and had been in contact with someone who was exposed in Wuhan. COVID-19, the disease caused by the new coronavirus, has sickened almost 9,000 people across 71 countries. The CDC reports the cases appear to be mild so far. The number of diagnosed cases in the U.S. has risen to at least 14 in Washington, California and Illinois, while there are another six in Texas, North Carolina, and Oregon. People who have been in contact with those who have tested positive for COVID-19 should take precautions and monitor themselves for symptoms if they develop new ones. There are currently no vaccines available to prevent the new coronavirus, nor are there treatments. Even if symptoms do not develop, it is important to remember that a person can carry the virus without knowing it for up to 14 days after symptoms have begun. Many local, state and federal agencies are preparing for a possible outbreak. The CDC has listed these institutions:

- Local hospitals (such as Oakland County Public Health)
- County and local health departments
- National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases
- FDA
- White House
- Department of Homeland Security
- National Institutes of Health
- Department of Health and Human Services
- National Science Foundation
- Nuclear Regulatory Commission
- Department of Energy
- US Travel Alerts
- Department of Justice
- Department of State
- Department of Defense
